Aboriginal Australian elder, activist and educator, Lilla Watson, declared, “If you’ve come here to help me, you’re wasting your time. But if you’ve come because your liberation is bound up with mine, then let us work together.” Often, social justice work being done by those in privilege (meaning all of us, because we all have privilege in some facet) leaves behind liberation from and eradication of oppressive systems and becomes a debilitating saviorism. I hear this in myself when I declare myself an ally to a community I’m a part of, even when I am doing absolutely nothing to work in solidarity with that community. I hear it in others when I am told that, as a queer person, I will be free and have equality once marriage equality is actualized across the nation. I hear it in the remarks of others as they fetishize the trauma, violence, and pain that we as marginalized individuals face by wanting to have a place in our communities, as if it is something for them to take on and wear, something that is a gift to receive. Our identities should be celebrated, but the violence we endure should never be something to exoticize or pity.

In social justice work, we often speak about intent versus impact. Most often, the conversation focuses on those microaggressors who may not intend to say something racist, sexist, or fatphobic, but the impact has already been felt. However, the conversation rarely focuses on those of us consider ourselves social justice activists, warriors for the good fight. We ignore the fact that some of the work we are doing is not meaningful and may even be causing harm. If a heterosexual, self-identified “ally,” acted on their conviction that more hate crimes legislation and more police intervention would decrease the lack of safety, comfort, and freedom that queer* and trans* communities face, they would be doing little in regards to our liberation, because they would be ignoring the historical and contemporary state sponsored violence that queer* and trans* bodies endure through the criminal legal system.

When we engage in social justice work, it must not be to save others from those “sad” and “poor” conditions they live within. We have to look past our guilt, our egos, and our urges to pity. Instead, we must ask ourselves, why am I doing this work? Am I doing it to make myself feel better? Am I doing it to bake myself some sweet, self-serving ally cookies that only take time, resources, and space away from marginalized individuals? Or am I here because I’m cognizant of the intersectionality of identities, and the fact that my queerness intersects with somebody else’s homelessness and with somebody else’s disability and with another person’s womxnhood? Liberation is a collective effort, and it is also a personal endeavor. Che Guevara said in regards to liberation, “I am not a liberator. Liberators do not exist. The people liberate themselves.” We cannot infantilize marginalized populations as we seek a socially just society. It is our duty, when working in solidarity with others, to serve to exploit our privilege, to empower others in whatever capacity they deem appropriate, and to be willing to do the dirty work while others head the front lines. When we work with together for each other, we can accomplish great things. When we work over people who are already disempowered, we only serve to reinforce the very problems we are working to dismantle.

We cannot infantilize marginalized populations as we seek a socially just society. It is our duty, when working in solidarity with others, to serve to exploit our privilege, to empower others in whatever capacity they deem appropriate, and to be willing to do the dirty work while others head the front lines.

More about Student Voice of Diversity:
This column will provide students an opportunity to voice their perspectives regarding diversity on a personal, academic, or community setting. If you are a student or know of a student that is interested in contributing please contact Noemy Medina at noemy.medina@utah.edu for more information!

Recommended Reading

Waking Up White and Finding Myself in the Story of Race by Debbie Irvine
[Amazon Description]

Last month’s recommended reading was Philosophical underpinnings of student affairs work on difference by Kathleen Manning (2009). We would love to hear your thoughts or reflections about the reading or receive your recommended readings to share with your colleagues across campus. Please submit any contributions to Noemy Medina, SADC Newsletter Editor, at noemy.medina@utah.edu.

Upcoming Diversity Modules

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Module 1:</th>
<th>Module 2:</th>
<th>Module 3:</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>October 14, 9am-11am</td>
<td>October 14, 11:30am-1:30pm, December 15, 1:00 pm-3:00 pm</td>
<td>October 16, 11:30am-1:30pm, December 16, 10 am-12 pm</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

For more information, visit: http://sadc.utah.edu/events/trainings.php
Upcoming Campus and Community Events

Fri., October 3
Sustainable Building Summit, As a leader in advancing sustainable places for all Utahn's, the US Green Building Council—Utah Chapter is honored to gather our green building community together for 7:15am to 4:15pm [more info]

Sat., October 4
Step Afrika!, Step Afrika is a powerfully visual and aural experience that moves, educates, and unifies audiences. , Kingsbury Hall, 7:30 PM [more info]

Fri., October 10
Invisible Men: Racial Indifference in Theories of Neoliberalism, Join us as Ella Myers argues that scholarly work on neoliberalism fails to address the specific workings of racial caste in the US Drawing on Wacquant’s concept of the 'ghetto-prison mesh,' ..., OSH 208, 12pm to 1pm

Thu., October 23
Dia de los Muertos, What it Is, What it Isn’t, Jane’s House, 6:30 PM to 8:30 PM [more info]

Mon., October 27
U REMEMBERS: Slavery & the Holocaust, Beverly Mitchell has been with Wesley Theological Seminary since 1998, specializing in studies of systematic theology, church history and human rights. She will be joined by Dieter Kuntz from the Holocaust Museum in DC who works on Racism and Nazi Eugenics, Gould Auditorium 12pm to 1pm

Fri., October 3
GASA GASA GIRL GOES TO CAMP: A Nisei Youth Behind a World War II Fence, Ms. Nakai Havey will share reflections from her creative memoir, Gasa Gasa Girl Goes to Camp, which combines storytelling, watercolor, and personal photographs to recount her youth in two Japanese American internment camps during World War II, 6pm-8pm Okazaki Community Mtg Rm

PRIDE Week Events
Keynote address by Laverne Cox is SOLD OUT

October Diversity Seminar
Same-Sex Marriage in the Courts

Wednesday, October 8th
12:00-1:30pm
Union Panorama East (4th Floor)

For more Info, visit: sadc.utah.edu